Picture this! A book for my young nephew

Saira Final, a marketing executive with South Yorkshire insolvency practice Moorhead Savage.

What was your first job?
I was a waitress at a hotel during one summer holiday at university.

If you weren't in your current position, what would you be doing?
I've always liked the idea of publishing a book, so I'd want to write and illustrate a picture book for my 12-week-old nephew to read when he's a bit older.

What was your worst mistake?
The same mistake I make every day – snoozing my alarm.

What's you ideal day away from the office?
Now that I have friends from university scattered across the country, it would be nice to visit where they live now and catch up with them.

Name one person you would like to have dinner with and why?
Jamie Oliver, but only if he cooks!

What was your best subject at school?
Geography.

What are your hobbies?
I'm not very good at sticking to a hobby for any length of time. Over the years I've tried all sorts: drumming, knitting, photography, swing dancing, baking and trampolining.

What would you do if you won the Lottery?
I wouldn't like to win the Lottery. It would be too much pressure to work out what to do with the money.

What's your favourite item of clothing?
I can never be without a scarf.

What's the best thing about Yorkshire?
I like how much variety there is – from beautiful countryside to bustling cities.

SAIRA FINAL: Loves the variety on offer in Yorkshire from the countryside to the cities.
